Editorial

Over the past couple of years, the Caribbean Journal of Philosophy (CJP) has gone through a lull. This was occasioned by a number of factors, chief among which has been the mobility of key persons in the management of the journal, and some technical glitches occasioned by the upgrades in the hosting site for the journal. When these are combined with the desire to always produce the quality journal that you have become accustomed to, in the short span of existence of your journal, the Caribbean Journal of Philosophy (CJP), it was decided that we would rather wait and get it right, than produce any issue with less than the quality of which you will be proud. As it were, this issue is brought to you with the expectation that your support, through the usual discussions, comments and reviews, will continue to enhance the quality of philosophical scholarship globally. We welcome suggestions on themes, issues and problems for subsequent volumes, and your guest editorship of issues are encouraged.
