Editorial

The Editorial Board of Caribbean Journal of Philosophy – CJP will like to appreciate colleagues, patrons, researchers, students and policy makers for staying with our Journal through the trials and tribulations which the COVID-19 Pandemic has inflicted on the whole world, and especially the global academy. Caribbean Journal of Philosophy has weathered the storm and will be growing strong in the years to come. As testimony to this resilience, we are happy to publish the 12th Volume of our Journal, and this Volume will have Numbers 1 and 2, because of the backlog of quality essays which our Reviewers have approved for publication.

Even more significantly, we would have two special issues for Volume 13, 2021. When these Issues are released, our valued constituency will be able to see the strength of the Journal being manifested in the variety of works that we publish, as well as the depth of our knowledge production and dissemination. Shortly thereafter, Volume 14, 2022, which is already being processed will be published also before the end of June, 2022. For all of this, we wish to appreciate you all for your support and faithfulness, as without this, we would not be able to serve the community of scholars and institutions we all represent.
